General advice and comments of the EREC

The committee recognizes that the common framing of Satoyama Reconnections would be crucial to addressing the diversity of conditions in the living lab sites in terms of cultures, demographics, economics, environmental/ecological conditions.

Looking forward, it would be highly significant to obtain and develop land use ideas that satisfy both nature positive and climate positive intentions. It is also important to encourage the project's attention to the well-being of the population in the living labs as they themselves view it, which goes beyond purely economic and technological measures.
