General advice and comments of the EREC

This well written and clearly structured proposal considers existing diverse land use practices as initiatives that fulfil human needs while respecting ecological boundaries and explores avenues to replicate and amplify them in transformative ways.

The committee considers that the project would benefit from a synthesizing framework that goes beyond the several case studies and the set of separate working group domains. In addition, the project may investigate further the complexity of socio-ecological systems that leads inevitably to making trade-off choices under limited knowledge of consequences.
